A CHARMING FAMILY.

Pleasant Scenes in a Haunted House at Washington.

A letter from Washington to the Cincinnati Gazette closes as follows: Like an epicure, I have hoarded the choicest morsels for last. Prepare to be horrified with your hair standing stiffly up, like the quills of the fretful porcupine. If the supernatural manifestations in our midst, of which I have been advised, make as rapid progress in the future, as they have in the past six months, we shall be under no necessity of consulting with the Shades and Eddys, and Davenport's Spiritualism; neither shall we be tempted to witness the marvels of "Katie King," or require the descendants of the Salem witch to call forth their Hocus and Omnes. But a truce to generalities. In the northwestern part of the city, in the very heart of the "West End," stands a house now modernized beyond the recognition of those familiar with its rambling, unsightly, irregular masonry of a few years back. For two years the genial host had dispensed liberal hospitality within its walls and the youth and effluence of the city have gathered around the well-filled table, and under the gentleman of the house has suddenly and inexplicably struck speechless, and continued in that condition for six months, when he was miraculously recovered his vocal powers. His explanation of the latter phenomenon was, that during the night he was awakened by noises, as if some one was about entering or had entered the house, and upon his endeavoring to rise, in order to frighten the invaders away, his hand was seized and violently compressed, as if the aggressor possessed powerful muscular development. In his fright and perturbation he called for help, with no more effect than if he had been in the habit of daily using his voice, although as I before affirmed, for six months he had been unable to speak above a whisper. As soon as he screamed the hand relaxed, and upon his lighting the gas and investigating the premises not a vestige of the suspected robbers could be found. The blinds and windows, and doors were undisturbed. Of course, the affair was considered quite mysterious, but was soon overlooked in the rush of gayety and business. This summer the family left the city for the summer, and in the interim the gentleman furnished to a family of reliable means and character. About dusk, evening after evening of late, these poor, frightened mortals have seen their easiest chairs occupied by weird forms and semi-transparent bodies moving busily about. An impalpable object, looking very much like a porcupine in outline, only habited in shimmering black, glides noiselessly and silently from one side of the room to the other. I wonder if it is the ghost of departed champagne bottles lamenting their loss of spirit!

Another creature, tall and thin, is clothed in the winding sheet and shroud of a buried person. One of the young ladies had been so severely pinched on the cheek that welts have followed the cruel pain. Hair is flung violently and unexpectedly, and the little children cower with fear and scream as if in agony from pinches and pulled hair. The matter has been hushed as much as possible, but has gradually crept out as such things eventually will, and last night some ladies went in about dusk and saw for themselves the horrors of which they had heard. Conspicuous among all the assembled spirits stood the mourning-trapped corpse, and the knitting-needle in gravellothy. They were slapped very violently on one cheek, but did not like the operation sufficiently to follow the bible advice of turning the other also. The family are packing their things preparatory to saying farewell to the haunted abode, and declare that no inducements would tempt them to longer remain. I mean to go up there some day and see if they will attack such an unbeliever as myself. That these manifestations are inexplicable I admit; but that our departed friends come back to us in the shape of corkscrews or Indian maidens, or that they would demean themselves to knock on floors, move tables, pinch our flesh or pull our hair, or appeal to our lower intellects in any way, I will not dishonor their memory by believing for a moment. I should think the life lived in the hereafter extremely demoralizing if I admitted such a thought. Nevertheless I wonder as much as any one what these mysteries can mean.

Speaking of ten-pins, a correspondent writes: "You see, while a man chooses a ball he can handle with a graceful swing on his right arm, the girls are bound to select the biggest one they can find. 'Toting it to the starting place, they go on a waddling run half way down the alley, and then let go their burden with a spiteful shove, give a sigh of relief, straighten up and walk back with a dignified and unconcerned air, as if they didn't care where that ball went, or whether it knocked down any pins or not."

A Snake Eater.

The Richmond Register gives an account of a strange character who lives at Waco, in Madison county. He is a hermit extraordinary. Disdaining to live in the habitation of men he frequents the woods, dark hollows and caverns, where he lives, and neither summer storms nor piercing winter winds are able to drive him from his solitary abode. His mode of living is not very extravagant, as he purchases ten cents' worth of meal at a time, which he keeps in a black satchel and uses for a pillow, with the bare ground for his couch, and naught save the blue canopy of heaven for a covering. He passes the most of his time in sleep. In appearance he is thin and cadaverous. Possessing an omnivorous gullet he eats snakes, lizards, skunks, ground hogs, rats, moles and all creeping things.

Last week he ate a ground hog which had been killed two weeks previous; putrefaction had already taken place, but he said it was splendid. He cooks his food in a novel manner, his only utensil for that purpose being an old coffee pot, into which he puts rats and other articles of food, sprinkling with a little meal, over which he pours some water and sets it on the fire to warm, and then devours it. He cooks snakes by roasting. He ate a large cow-snake roasted last week, sucked the bones and pronounced it a sumptuous repast. He refuses to eat at a table, though repeatedly urged to do so, or to partake of a food unless prepared by himself. Strange to say, this singular specimen of humanity can both read and write, and he possesses a fair education. His colloquial powers are good, though he seldom and sparingly admits of intercourse. Studiously avoiding society, his whole nature seems to be warped by moroseness and melancholy.

Swimming Two Hundred Miles.

From the New Herald.

In the steamship Queen, which left this port yesterday afternoon, there was one of the passengers the noted Paul Boynton, pearl diver, life saver, and man fish in general. He leaves on a dangerous experiment, which is none other than to make a sea voyage, in a life-saving suit. It is his intention to drop overboard not less than two hundred miles from land, either after leaving New York or before reaching Liverpool, where he will be left to the mercy of the waves until he shall meet with a passing vessel. Mr. Boynton is confident that he will come out all right in the matter and prove the value of the dress. This is a rubber suit or armor of peculiar pattern, containing compartments which, when inflated, it is claimed, are able to float a man of any weight in safety. The suit, by Boynton, will weigh fifteen pounds, and he carries with him, in a rubber bag, two dozen signal lights, two pounds of cheese, six pounds of crackers, one piece of bologna sausage, one ax and one bowie knife for sharks, signal flag, rockets, an extra suit of clothes, and a large double-bladed paddle with which to propel himself. Mr. Boynton is a man of fine physique, and weighed yesterday about one hundred and eighty pounds. On the Jersey coast he claims to have saved seventy-one lives.

That Monster.

From the Adrian (Mich.) Press.

We have heretofore mentioned the circumstances of the discovery on the farm of Orman Tuttle, in Seneca, of the bones of some huge animal that zoologists know nothing of, and the like of which has not been seen since the days of the flood. The excitement over this discovery is unabated. A large number of bones, in a fair state of preservation, have already been exhumed, being found at a depth of some ten feet below the surface of the ground. Both of the horns, or tusks, for it has not been decided which they are—have been taken out. One of them was broken, but the other is perfect, and measures something over eight feet, and weighs 150 pounds. It was exhibited at the Hillsdale Fair, and the broken one and some of the ribs were shown the last day of the fair in this city. The ribs are of immense size, the shortest being over six feet long. One of the thigh bones has been taken out, and good judges estimate the height of the animal at twenty feet, and its length at thirty feet. Its teeth are a foot longer than a man's two fists and a finger. What sort of an object this huge monster could have been when alive can at most be conjectured. Our informant stated that they are taking out sections of the skeleton every day, and that when they are all taken out there will be several wagon loads. The discovery of the skull is awaited with great anxiety. A prominent citizen of this place, we understand, is negotiating for the remains of this mastodon. Whether, however, it is a mastodon, a megatherium, megalonyx, megatherium, or any other fossilized mammal, remains to be determined.

Horse Cars in Paris.

Lucy H. Hooper, in one of her readable letters to the Philadelphia Press, says: "The American tramway," as they call the horse railway over here, has just gone into operation. It runs from the Place de l'Etoile to Suresnes, and the cars have been crowded ever since it was opened. There are great complaints, however, about the high prices, for French people are used to going around on the tops of omnibuses for the small sum of three sous, and they do not relish having to pay six, whether they will or no, the cars having no seats on top. That is, I think, a mistake in their construction, for owing to the comparatively mild climate, never in the extremes of heat or cold, these outside seats are never untenable, as they would be with us for fully one-half of the year. It is a great pity that Paris has not at least one city railroad, the broad boulevard Haussmann, for instance, would furnish an excellent thoroughfare for one, and the omnibus service is so inadequate to the needs of the populace that such a road would be immensely useful and popular. But not only are the proprietors of the omnibus lines opposed to such an innovation, but all passenger railways in Paris have to do to encounter more serious opposition, namely, that of owners of real estate in the city, for it is of course to their interest to keep up the present high rates of rents, and they fear that if the suburbs are brought within easy reach of the business quarters in Paris rents there will rise, and those dwellings in the heart of the city will proportionately fall.

It is now proposed to surround the restored Vendome Column with a political weathercock.

AGRICULTURE.

COMMERCE.

A letter from Berlin says: "Prince Frederick William, eldest son of the Crown Prince, and heir to the German throne, has now been duly entered as a scholar of the Second Form at the Public Grammar School at Cassel. Initiating the practice usually observed in this country, his parents took him to the head master of the establishment, and, like ordinary citizens, had him examined in their presence. Before leaving the director, as the august monarch of a German gymnasium is called, the Crown Prince stipulated that his son was not to be addressed 'Royal Highness,' but to be known only under the name of Prince William. He was, in all respects, as were the other boys. The Prince will live in a house opposite the school, under the superintendence of General von Goltberg and Dr. Hurspeter, the latter a philologist and the son of the gentleman to whom the Crown Prince is indebted for his Latin. Thus installed, the future Kaiser, whatever the emergency awaiting him in after life, will have to make good his position among comrades quite as eager as himself to get well up in Livy and Euclid. There are some thirty boys in the same form with him, most of them the sons of well-to-do inhabitants of Cassel."

SPECIAL NOTICE.

CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED.

SCHENCK'S PULMONIC SYRUP.

SCHENCK'S SEA WEED TONIC.

SCHENCK'S MARIKAKE PILLS.

Are the only medicines that will cure Pulmonary Consumption.

Frequently medicines that will stop a cough will occasion the death of the patient; they look up the liver, stop the circulation, and the stomach, and in fact, they stop the action of the very organs that caused the cough.

Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia are the causes of two-thirds of the cases of Consumption. Many persons complain of a dull pain in the side, constipation, coated tongue, pain in the shoulder-blade, feelings of drowsiness and restlessness, the food lying heavily on the stomach, accompanied with acidity and belching up of wind.

These symptoms usually originate from a disordered condition of the stomach or a torpid liver.

Persons so affected, if they take one or two bottles of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, will be suddenly checked, will find the stomach and liver cleared, remaining torpid and inactive, and almost before they are aware the lungs are a mass of roses, and ulcerated, the result of which is death.

Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup is an expectorant which does not contain opium or anything calculated to check a cough suddenly.

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic dissolves the food, mixes with the gastric juices of the stomach, aids digestion, and creates a ravenous appetite.

When the bowels are costive, skin sallow, or the symptoms otherwise of a bilious tendency, Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is required.

These medicines are prepared only by J. H. SCHENCK & CO., N. E. corner Sixth and Arch sts., Philadelphia. And are for sale by all druggists and dealers.
